NEWS FLASH!!!

Saul Kraut, well-known Fort Camp student, was so amazed at finding a piece of warm toast at breakfast this morning that he fainted almost immediately. He was quickly revived by holding a plate of scrambled eggs under his nose....

Yet More Promiscuous Immorality and Salacious Smut by Ronald A.N. Kensington

The time has come to expose one of the most insidious plots (probably Communist-inspired) ever to strike at the core of Fort Camp's moral fibre; a plot that is undermining every ideal that Fort Camp stands for - honor, integrity, and above all, no drinking; a plot that is being perpetrated by infiltrators who have gained control of Fort Camp's own canteen. This dastardly deed shall go down in infamy as the Beer Mug Plot..

What is their effect?? To condone drinking at Fort Camp, possibly to encourage drinking at Fort Camp.. And not only is drinking immoral, but it might even bring bad publicity! This evil must be rooted out: the rule can't be changed, so the beer mugs will have to go.....

A Tale of Fair City

There was once a city called Fair City. And all its citizens thought it the fairest of all possible fair cities.

It was odd, though, that they should like it so much, for all the houses and buildings were just like wooden boxes, all a dingy shade of white or yellow; and all their rooms like prison cells.

For another thing, they all had to eat in one building, by order of the Lord High Director of Eating, and then had no choice but to take the hash flung at them by the Staff of Eating.

But the really surprising thing was that all the citizens should agree in spite of their obvious differences in class and character. There were, for example, some extremely shady characters, found mainly in the run-down but notorious "Dogleg" District. Then there were the respectable citizens, living in and near the "Aliho" Area. And finally there were some of the snootiest of snooty citizens, concentrated primarily in a district conspicuously apart from the others, the "Maria Bollerta" District.

Yet, they did all agree. For them, Fair City was absolutely the fairest of all possible fair cities, the Directors of the city beamed on them, and all was well.

However, one day a comely but simple young man called Candied Topping and a beautiful though innocent girl called Cake chanced to meet in a room in one of the dingy white houses. She dropped her handkerchief, he picked it up. As he did so, their hands touched; then their knees trembled, their lips met, their hands wandered. But alas, at that moment the Lord High Director of Housing passed by. And poor Candied Topping was expelled from Fair City with great kicks in the behind; As for the unhappy Cake, she soon followed, by order of the Fair City Committee For Women's Standards. And so now the luckless pair stood alone together in the dark unknown of the outside world. What were they to do?

Les Rohringer Sneaks on Sex and Related Things... by Shameless Nightingale

The purpose of my latest interview with Les Rohringer, Head of Housing, and of this article, is to make Housing policy as clear as possible.

The open-door policy during Open House, says Rohringer, is a minor detail. The rule is meant to prevent rumours and unfavorable publicity: "a closed door and a squeaky bed" can cause a lot of gossip. However, this rule can be bypassed by the chaperone, who should know the temperament of the people in his hut well enough to tell whether or not a closed door will lead to suspicion and gossip. Mature understanding and discussion, not hard and fast rules, are the basis for deciding what behaviour is substandard. Rohringer describes substandard behaviour as behaviour which gives the students and the university a bad public image and "we can't afford" a bad public image.

"What would be the reaction of the Housing Administration if a couple were found engaging in sexual intercourse in residence?" I enquired. "Very bad," replied Rohringer. Housing would react very strongly against such substandard behaviour. If you're caught having sex in Fort Camp, it appears you get screwed twice.
